

Isaiah 1:2-20 Bibliography

John F. Hobbins
jfhobbins@gmail.com

The titles listed and the fields of research represented are those which bear most directly on Isa 1:2-20 in terms of the questions discussed in “Isaiah 1:2-20: A Study in Rhetoric and Prosody,” online at www.ancienthebrewpoetry.typepad.com. Reasons for treating Isa 1:2-20 as a rhetorical unit appropriate to a specific situation a prophet named Isaiah might have addressed are offered there. Titles which argue for or against this understanding or one like it are among those collected below, as are titles that discuss the historical, cultural, and ideological contexts of the text should it have been intended, as I hold, for public declamation in the aftermath of Sennacherib’s invasion of Judah in 701, perhaps a year or two following.

Texts and titles whose Vorlage or point of departure is the Hebrew text are listed. Texts and titles whose point of departure is at one or more removes from the Hebrew original, including the Vetus Latina and commentaries based on OG or Vulgate Isaiah, are not. A huge and inexcusable gap – one among many: the lack of a proper overview of rabbinic and Karaite exegesis of Isaiah.

The bibliography begins with a list of text editions of Isaiah in Hebrew and ancient translations therefrom. Forthcoming editions are also noted. Representative lists of commentaries on the Hebrew text before and after 1700 follow. A commentary after the present writer’s heart has yet to be written. It would examine Isaiah from the points of view text-criticism, philology, and linguistics, and treat it as an example of poetry, rhetoric, and theology.

The core of the bibliography is a searchable list of titles bearing directly on the interpretation of Isa 1:2-20 or a subunit, feature, or aspect thereof. Specified pages relate to Isa 1:2-20 unless otherwise indicated. Lists of bibliographies of book of Isaiah studies, overviews of (First) Isaiah studies, introductions to (First) Isaiah and to (First) Isaiah studies, and other sector-specific bibliographies round the essay off.

The lists are meant to provide a starting point for future research. Online resources are also listed. The bibliography is a work in progress.
